FROM WOMAN'S VIEWPOINT.

Philanthropists who devote their lives to the alleviation of misery are strongly opposed to indiscriminate charity on the ground that it robs poor people of proper October Brides Hold Sway in pride and self-respect and turns untold dollars to the pockets of undeserving men and women. They find beggars living in luxury, and a vast amount of unavoidable poverty for which there are no funds.

I do not believe a poor man or woman ever came into unexpected wealth without being besieged with appeals to share it with strangers. I have seen samples of these begging letters, and audacious they were to a degree. One woman wanted a piano, and another craved a trip to the South. One asked for cast-off clothing of the fine kind, and others wanted money in varying sums. I do not remember that there was a solitary appeal from a hungry family, the kind of appeal best calculated to command attention. The well-known people of wealth keep secretaries to head off this continuous avalanche of begging letters and save themselves a deal of annoyance.

One of the slum workers told me that if the gifts of the generous could all be devoted to the use of the really destitute there would be few neglected cases, Cases of sickness and actual need demanded immediate attention, of course, she said, but in the main it was much better to allow beneficiaries to give an equivalent in work, something within their scope. Thus was self-respect maintained, as the place last evening at the residence of matter was placed upon a basis of business that could not injure super-sensitive Mr. Jesse H. Robinson. 1867 S street. feelings.

Occasionally you will find pride that makes benefits impossible, no matter ow much they are needed. I know a vender of fruit, an Italian woman, whose presence of a small company of rela- life has been of the hardest. If any woman needed encouragement in a splendid work, she is the one, for her children are a credit The bride, who entered the drawing to her, yet it was never possible to make her a present of any kind, to show room with her father, had as her only the least little bit of kindness, without being more than repaid from her stock. attendant Mrs. Wendall Whiting. The Such fineness of feeling deserves a better reward than she has ever received.

When a man comes to me with an offer to earn a meal, I know he is hungry and am glad to hire him. I also know that he feels no degradation in accepting what he needs after he has carned it. But the one who wants food and expects mounted on soft white satin, with which she were a tulle veil and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and Bride whatever did not appeal to his taste. Previously to that I had been actuated by roses. The groom was attended by Mr. the feeling that it was better to give to a dozen unworthy persons than run the risk of turning away one who was in actual want.

That is the feeling of most kind-hearted persons, and that, it is said, is what is increasing the pauper class. We are told that honor compels a return of Robinson, of Pittsburg, Pa.; Mr. and favors, in decent life, and there is no good reason why we should deny honor to drs. Clifton Smith, of Philadelphia; Mr. any human being. It is generally possible to make some sort of a return for the nd Mrs. W. F.
